

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

It has been the object of the Authors of this Work to produce a more complete and more perfect ENGLISH-LATIN DICTIONARY than has hitherto existed; and the long delay in its publication has been owing to the time and labour necessary to execute this intention.

When the announcement of a new English-Latin Dictionary was first made, the extent of the labour involved in such a work was far from being adequately estimated. Had we anticipated that nearly fifteen years would have elapsed before the enterprize could be completed, we should probably have shrunk from the toil. Yet this has been the time expended upon the Work. The first announcement of this Dictionary was made in 1855; the completed work issues from the press in 1870.

In order to appreciate the nature and extent of the labour undertaken, three things require to be kept in view.

1. There was no existing English-Latin Dictionary, from which any considerable amount of help could be derived. The English-Latin Dictionary published under the joint names of Messrs. Riddle and Arnold is avowedly based upon the German work of Georges; but, though containing valuable matter, it is confused in arrangement, and in general does not indicate the different classical sources from which its Latin phraseology is derived. It was therefore of no use to us except in the way of suggestion; and, moreover, the whole of its material could, in most cases, be found by a simple reference to the pages of Georges, or, in a much more satisfactory and complete form, to those of Kraft.

Thus the lines of the work had to be laid de novo, as much so as if no other Dictionary of the kind existed. An entirely new plan was accordingly adopted; a new classification of the meanings of the English words had to be elaborated; and new examples and illustrations adduced.

2. In order to ensure the pertinency of the examples, it was necessary to use special care in the verification of references. Very many quotations, at first sight applicable, were found on actual reference to the context from which they were detached to be not exactly in point, or, if available at all, available only by way of suggestion. Only those who have had similar experience can appreciate the labour which such a task as this entails. Not a few works, in themselves excellent, have yet many false references; as, for example, the extremely valuable Ciceronian Lexicon of Nizolius; while even the most accurate are, of course, sometimes found fallible. In some cases an error of this kind has been painfully tracked from one authority to another; and after appearing in every successive edition of Forcellini's great work, has met with its correction—probably for the first time—in our pages. Doubtless incorrect references are to be found here also, in spite of the extreme care which has been exercised; and the Authors will be grateful to any persons who will kindly communicate such should they be discovered; but it is believed that they are extremely few in proportion to the total number. And even in the case of these, the student may feel assured that the verification has been actually made, in spite of a clerical or typographical error in recording it.

3. The Work has grown and developed under our hands in such a way as to demand greatly increased time and labour. Owing chiefly to modifications of plan, not less than half of the book certainly—perhaps, it may safely be said, two-thirds—has been executed thrice over. It is hoped that in the improvement which the work has thus undergone exists an ample compensation for the delay which has occurred. The earlier part of the book will be seen to contain fewer exact references than the latter. In fact, it was not until a large portion of it had been printed, and a still larger portion prepared for the press, that the plan of specifying the precise place in an author where each example is to be found, was—from a growing sense of its advantages—adopted. This course involved an immense addition of labour, and was attended by the slight anomaly indicated; which may perhaps be allowed to mark the development of an enterprize more than ordinarily trying to patience and industry. From the very beginning, however, exact references had been introduced in cases where the special importance or interest of any illustration appeared to require it.

Every article in the book is the result of original and independent research; and it is not too much to say that a single column often represents the hard labour of several days. The progress of the work has been often delayed for hours by the difficulty of finding a passage in a Latin author wrongly quoted, or of meeting with a suitable Latin equivalent for an English word.

Some features of the plan of the Work require a brief exposition.

1. Great pains have been taken in classifying the different senses of the English words, so as to enable the student readily to find what he wants. The facilities afforded by the use of different kinds of type have been freely used; and those senses of words have been brought forward most prominently, and treated most fully, which appeared likely to cause perplexity to the student, minute subdivisions of meanings being avoided. At the same time, the logical order has been as far as possible followed; and even senses which have become obsolete have been noted where this appeared necessary to the proper development of the use of any particular word. The leading meanings of the English words are marked by black Roman numerals (I., II., III., &c.), a brief definition being in all such cases added in Italics. The work is thus to a large extent a Dictionary of the English language proper, as well as an English-Latin Dictionary.

2. Where there are several Latin equivalents, these are kept quite distinct, and marked with black Arabic numerals (1, 2, 3, etc.). To distinguish synonyms, short explanations of different Latin words are added in brackets. Each meaning is illustrated by examples from the classical writers, and those phrases are as a general rule given in both English and Latin. This Work—it must be borne in mind—is not a Latin-English, but an English-Latin Dictionary. Moreover, it is one professing to deal not only with English words considered by themselves, but with those words as occurring in their most frequent combinations with other words, and especially in characteristic and idiomatic phrases. The English given in any case is not therefore to be regarded as a mere translation of the Latin example—which any one might make for himself—but as furnishing a specimen of such combinations. Besides this, the presentation of English and Latin together—even when not absolutely needed for phraseological purposes—was thought likely to be of use to the student, by giving him a firmer grasp of the meaning of the Latin. A mere Latin extract is often passed over by the young student. The vehicle is foreign; and the extra time consumed in reading it, and, what is quite another matter, in bringing home to the mind a clear impression of its force, is a consideration not to be overlooked.

Further, and to this point the Authors attach great importance, the course adopted appeared to furnish a test of the pertinency of the illustrations, of the most decisive and even crucial nature. If the Latin equivalent in any given example could without harshness be translated by the English word under treatment, conclusive proof was thus afforded that the correspondence between the two was real and not merely apparent; and the laying of both together before the student seemed to be the plan best calculated to give him the fullest satisfaction on the point.

3. The Vocabulary of English words treated is for the most part limited to words in actual use or occurring in authors generally read. Should the student require the Latin equivalent of an obsolete English word, his obvious course will be to look under its current modern equivalent. Very many of the unnecessary Latinisms which crowd the columns of Webster and Richardson are omitted altogether. On the other hand, the student will find here many derived forms—especially the participial adjectives—which are not to be met with in any similar work. Technical terms of Art, Science and Theology have been given when such appeared to possess that kind of general interest which brings them within the range of all persons of culture, apart from their own special field. In representing theological terms, the language of theologians has been adopted. The nomenclature of Christian Theology—Catholic and Protestant—is itself mainly Latin; and must often be used apart from all questions of elegance or classicality. To write a treatise on the Sacraments in words known only to Cicero would be as absurd as for an English author to attempt to describe a railway or a steam-engine in the phraseology of Shakspeare and Bacon. So on the principle—artifici in sua arte credendum—the authority of the Scriptores rei rusticae has been chiefly appealed to in matters relating to farming, gardening, and the management of stock; that of Priscian and the authors embraced in the copious collection of Putschius, in matters grammatical and verbal; that of the Scriptores gramatici, in the case of some terms relating to geometry and mensuration; and that of Pliny the Elder, for the miscellaneous vocabulary of the natural sciences. In the case of words for which there neither is nor can be any classical equivalent, recourse has been freely had to more modern sources. Such words are marked by an asterisk. But while special terms have been taken from writers of various ages, in all that relates to the complexion of sentences involving questions of taste or style, the aim of the Authors has been to follow in the steps marked out by Cicero and his contemporaries, or the writers of what is called the Augustan age.

4. In dealing with English words nearly synonymous, the Authors have carefully sought to avoid needless repetition. They have aimed to bring their matter in each case under its natural head; that is, under the English word by which the Latin equivalent in question is oftenest represented. When the same equivalent has to be adduced again under another English word, it is for the most part less fully treated, or the student is simply directed to another place for illustrations of its use. Mere cross references have, however, been avoided as far as possible; and pains have been taken to present under every article enough to be of service to the student, who may perhaps lack time for a prolonged consultation. Nothing is more vexatious than to be sent unprofitably from article to article; on the other hand, no reasonable person will complain if, at times, his first consultation is rewarded by only an instalment of the information of which he is in quest, when a little further search will discover all he wants.

It is difficult in a work of this kind to express properly the obligations under which the Authors lie to previous labourers. But in the foremost rank, mention must be made of the German-Latin Lexicon of Kraft, which has been consulted throughout, and drawn upon for very many illustrations which might not have been otherwise arrived at. The briefer and inferior work of Georges supplies little that is not to be found in its predecessor. The French-Latin Dictionary of Quicherat furnishes perhaps a more extensive vocabulary than either, and has often been found extremely useful in the conversion of rarer and more technical words; the only drawback to its utility being the entire absence of precise references. The work of Riddle and Arnold, to which allusion has already been made, has also been consulted; and some examples and suggestions have been derived from it. These, however, when appearing to be the original property of the work in question, are acknowledged, in loco, thus [R. and A.]. In most cases however they are derived from Georges. The excellent treatise of Nägelsbach (Die Lateinische Stilistik) has furnished some valuable hints for the conversion of various modes of speech in which German and English alike differ from Latin; also of some words partaking in an especial manner of the complexion of modern thought. The synonym books of Habicht and Döderlein have also been carefully consulted. To express indebtedness to the great work of Forcellini—the German edition of which has been chiefly used—is almost superfluous; while the indispensable Lexicon of Nizolius (before referred to), the 'Lexicon Quintilianicum' of Bonnell, the 'Lexicon Taciteum' of Bötticher, and the copious indexes to almost all classical authors of any importance to be found in the great standard Editions, have furnished aids without which our labour would have often been multiplied many fold. For scientific words we have derived valuable assistance from Mayne's 'Expository Lexicon of the Terms, Ancient and Modern, in Medical and General Science,' London, 1860. On lexical and grammatical points frequent reference is made to Dr. Smith's Latin-English Dictionary, and to the Student's Latin Grammar by the authors of the present Work.

It remains to notice the assistance which the Authors have received, and the part which they themselves have taken in the preparation of the Dictionary. It was projected by Dr. Smith, and upon him has mainly devolved the editorship and general superintendence of the work, in addition to the composition of various portions. He was originally associated in his labours with Mr. Robson, who had rendered valuable aid in the preparation of the Latin-English Dictionary. Mr. Robson devoted two years exclusively to making preparations for the work; taking as his basis Webster's quarto Dictionary, supplemented by other standard Dictionaries, and assigning from the best sources the ordinary Latin equivalent for each word and every meaning of each word. Having completed this laborious task, Mr. Robson proceeded to draw up the separate articles in detail, and had reached as far as nearly the end of C, when other engagements compelled him to resign his share in the undertaking. Dr. Smith then obtained the assistance of Mr. Hall, whose name now appears on the title-page along with his own. Mr. Hall originally entered on the work as a contributor; and as such has completed more than one half of the entire book—from the beginning of D to nearly the end of P, besides other detached portions. But prolonged association with Dr. Smith in the undertaking led naturally to a participation in the care and responsibility of the work as a whole. Notwithstanding the unremitting exertions of Dr. Smith and Mr. Hall, it was found necessary to call in further assistance in order to finish the Work in any reasonable time. Accordingly the Authors have to acknowledge their obligations to the following scholars: Mr. F. Millard, M.A., of the International College, London, and of Queen's College, Oxford, who has executed under their superintendence portions of R and S, and the greater part of T; to Mr. Philip Smith, B.A., who contributed the articles from "Pull" to the end of Q; and to Mr. C. A. F. Fennell, M.A., Fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge; Rev. C. E. Graves, M.A., Classical Lecturer and late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge; Rev. W. C. Green, M.A., late Fellow of King's College, and Classical Lecturer, Queen's College, Cambridge; Rev. H. W. Phillott, M.A., Rector of Staunton-on-Wye, and late Student of Christ Church, Oxford; Mr. E. B. Rand, B.A., late Student of Caius College, Cambridge; and Mr. Evelyn S. Shuckburgh, M.A., Fellow of Emmanuel College, Cambridge; for very valuable aid in preparing the later letters of the Alphabet. But strenuous exertions have been made by the Authors to secure the homogeneity of the work, and it is hoped that the student will in no part seriously miss that unity of treatment which is so essential to the utility of a work of this nature.

In conclusion, the Authors would commend the fruit of their long labour to the candid and favourable consideration of English scholars and students. It is inevitable that a work of such magnitude should have not a few blemishes and imperfections; but they nevertheless trust that it will be received as supplying, in a manner not altogether unworthy, a long and deeply felt want in our English schools and colleges.

AN

A.

A. First letter of the alphabet. A. *Indech. f. (sc. littera), more frequently n., Cic. Priso: to make the mark of the letter A, litteram A imprimere, Cic. a, or (before vowels) an: 1. As the indefinite article prefixed to a substantive employed to designate any one of a species, it has no representative in Latin, which in such cases employs the singular number of the substantive alone: he bore pain as a man, tulit dolorem ut vir, Cic.: a Greek, Graecus; a Roman, Romanus. 2. Even when a definite single object is spoken of, the indefinite article is usually unrepresented in Latin: there was a great plain, and in it a tolerably large earthen elevation, planities erat magna et in ea tumulus terrenus, satls grandis, Caes. 3. Sometimes, however, when special attention is to be directed to the object, aliquis or quidam is employed in a sense nearly equivalent to our expression, a certain: the Peripatetics maintain that there is in the minds of men, as it were, a divine voice, Peripatetici censent esse in mentibus hominum tantquam oraculum aliquod, Cic.: a (certain) soldier of the tenth legion, quidam ex militibus decimae legionis, Caes. 4. When used distributively, as in the phrases once a year, so much a head, etc., it must be expr. with the help of a distributive numeral: as the price of corn had now risen to 50 denarii a bushel, jam ad denarios L in singulos modos annonae pervenerat, Caes.: he promises to the soldiers four jugera a man, militibus pollicetur quaterna in singulos jugera, Caes.: if ye are willing to quit Saguntum unarmed with two dresses a piece, si inermes cum binis vestimentis velitis ab Sagunto exire, Liv. Phr.: twice a day, bis in die, Cic.; bis die, Tib.: once a month, semel in mense, Cat.: twice a month, bis in mense, Plin.: twice a year, bis in anno, Varr., Cic.; bis anno, Plin. V. When referring to a particular thing: is, ea, id: a certain reward and not a small one, certa merces nec ea parva, Cic.: a thing which was easy to be done, id quod facile facta fuit, Cic.: at such a time, id temporis, Cic.: of such a kind, id genus, Cic.—NOTE. The ordinary indef. art. must on no account be translated by unus: v. ancillary: v. SUPPLEMENTAL.

and: 1. et: properly joins words or sentences which have, or are represented as having, only a fortuitous or temporary connection: (i) the simple conjunction: cold and hunger and thirst, frigus et fames et sitis, Cic.: Caesar orders Divitiacus to be summoned to him and converses with him, Caesar Divitiacum ad se vocari jubet et cum eo colloquitur, Caes.—Ob.: When several substantives are connected in English by and, as in the first of the above examples, the et must either be repeated with each additional member, as there (ἐνσυνδεδεσθαι) or else omitted altogether (ἀνσυνδεδεσθαι): as, honour, faith, intellect, concord, honos, fides, mens, concordia, Cic. When a number of words are connected, the latter mode is usually preferred unless special emphasis is needed. (Cic. has in one place, composite, ornate, copiose loqui; and in another, prudenter et composite et ornate et memoriter dicere (Or. 1, 19, 64): the several words being in the latter case brought out with more distinctness and emphasis.) Que (v. inf. 3) is however frequently used with the last member of a series, when that member gathers up a number of particulars: as, in astronomy, the rising, setting, and movements of the stars, in astrologia, ortus, obitus, motusque siderum, Cic. (ii) the conj. emphasized = and indeed: you were wrong and indeed exceedingly wrong, errabas, et vehementer errabas, Cic. (iii) = and then (indicating an immediate result): he said, and then instantly perceived that he had fallen into the midst of the enemy, dixit, et extemplo sensit medios delapsus in hostes, Virg.: (iv) = and yet (subjoining an emphatic question or exclamation): and yet are there people who complain about the Apian way? et sunt qui de via Appia querantur? Cic. (v) = and so too, and also: these things themselves are a source of pleasure to me, and so too were those to the Torquati, haec ipsa mihi sunt voluptati, et erant illa Tor- quati, Cic. 2. atque or ac (the latter in classical prose gen. only before consonants): this conj. differs from et in denoting a closer connection between the ideas represented by the connected words or clauses: hence it is often employed to join two substantives which together represent a single complex idea. (i) the simple conj.: to speak from the heart and truly, ex animo ac vere dicere, Ter.: the dangers of this city and empire, pericula hujus urbis atque imperii, Cic.: with your virtuous feeling, isto animo atque virtute, Cic.: Caesar gave the signal for joining battle, and having set out for the other wing, he fell in with those actually engaged, Caesar proclit committendi signum dedit, atque in alteram partem profectus, pugnantibus occurrit, Caes. (ii) the conj. emphasized = and indeed, and even, and especially: a difficult affair, and indeed the most difficult of all, res difficilis atque omnium difficilissima, Cic.: great thanks are due to the immortal gods, and especially to this very Jupiter Stator, magna diis Immortalibus habenda est gratia atque huic ipse Jovi Statori, Cic.: the river can be crossed on foot in one place only, and even in this with difficulty, flumen uno omnino loco pedibus atque hoc seorsum transiri potest, Caes. 3. que, an enclitic which connects words rather than sentences, and words usually standing in the same relation to the rest of the sentence, and representing things very closely connected, either naturally and generally, or at least under the circumstances spoken of; hence such words often denote a single complex idea. Que must be affixed to the second of the two words; and it is to be specially observed that it is rarely added to words ending in a short vowel, especially et: that force overcame all the allurements of pleasure and ease, ea vis omnia blandimenta voluptatis otiiue vicit, Cic.: the Aulerci and Lemoni shut their gates, Aulerci Lexovigini portas clausuerunt, Caes.: having collected twice and underwood they go straight to the camp, sarmatis virgultisque collectis ad castra pergunt, Caes.: the arrangement and order of the line of march, ratio ordoque agminis, Caes.: a shout and din arose, and some rushed one way, some another, panic-stricken, clamor fremtusque oriebatur alique aliam in partem perterriti ferebantur, Caes. Que may be used after a substantive preceded by a preposition: as, he went to Rome and began to appear in the forum, Romam demigravit, in foroque cessæ coepit, Nep.: Cic.—N.B. (i) When a connected clause contains a negative, the conjunction and and the negative are often expressed by neque or ne, especially where the former clause contains a correlative conjunction: you perceive that he both had presence of mind and was not wanting in prudence, intellectus et animus ei prout fuisse, nec consilium defuisse, Cic.: at that time games were celebrated during ten days, and nothing was omitted with a view to appeasing the gods, tunc et ludi decem per dies facti sunt, neque res ulla quæ ad placandum deos pertineret, praetermissa est, Cic.: he saw that affairs were in a critical state and that there was no reserve that could be sent up, rem esse in angusto vidit, neque ullum esse subsidium quod submitti posset, Cic. (ii) And connected with a demonstrative or personal pronoun may often be expressed in Latin by the relative pronoun alone: and Caesar having been informed of these things orders ships of war to be built, quibus de rebus Caesar certior factus naves longas adificari jubet, Caes.: the soldiers were endeavouring to board the enemies' ships, and when the barbarians observed this, they strove to save themselves by flight, milites transcendere in hostium naves contendebant. Quod postquam barbari fieri animadvertunt, iuga salutem petere contenderunt, Caes.

(31) In many cases where "and" is employed to connect single words, it must or may be omitted in Latin, especially in enumerations; but as it is impossible to reduce such cases to rule, they must be left to observation. It frequently happens also that where we employ two or more co-ordinate sentences or clauses, connected by "and," the Latin language expresses the sense of one or more of the clauses by a participial or relative clause, attached to one of the terms of the principal sentence, and therefore forming part of the latter, so that a conjunction is not required. But the grammar rather than the dictionary must be consulted on such points: v. also NOTH (conj.).

Both the above words are post-class.: the use of the tunic appears to have rendered that of an apron unnecessary. The words subligaculum, subligar, campestre, denote a kind of drawers, not an apron.

noting simple existence: (i) In a simple proposition: there is a river Arar, flumen est Arar, Caes.: the most worthless fellows of all who are, have been, or shall be, homo nequissimus omnium qui sunt, qui fuerunt, qui futuri sunt, Cic. (ii) When a relative clause follows, its verb is in the indic. when it states a fact; but in the subj. when it expresses a mere conception, or implies contingency: there are some who do not dare to say what they think, sunt qui quod sentiunt non audent dicere, Cic. (with reference to certain persons): yet there are officers which (=of such a kind that) we should be willing to forgive, sunt delicta tamen quibus ignovisse velimus, Hor. (iii) The perfect tenses sometimes denote the cessation of existence: we Trojans have been, Troy has been, and the great glory of the Teucrians, fuimus Troes, fuit illium, et ingens gloria Teucriorum, Virg.: they have ceased to be, fuerunt (Cic.'s announcement of the death of the conspirators). (iv) The dat. is often used with sum to denote with what the subject of the verb is connected or to what it belongs: their private property was scanty, privatus illis census erat brevis, Hor.: the name of this place too is Troy, Trojae et huius loco nomen est, Liv. (concerning the double dat., v. L. G. § 297). (v) The Latin verb is employed elliptically = to be the fact, to be possible, &c.: what do you wish me to say to you except what is the fact? quid tibi vis dicam nisi quod est? Pl.: what you say, Laetius, is true, sunt ista, Laeli, Cic.: there is no reason why we should say much, non est quod multa loquamur, Hor.: which it is not possible to say in verse, quod versu dicere non est, Hor.

In connection with attributives, denoting a definite manner of being; the verb being merely the logical copula: (i) we are at leisure, otiosi sumus, Cic.: sometimes with an adv.: as, that enterprise was unsuccessful for the Volsci, frustra id inceptum Volscis fuit, Liv. (with an adv. however to be is often expr. by habeo: v. INTR. 4). (ii) When a subs. and an adj. together are employed to describe, in connection with the verb "be," they are in Latin put in either the abl. or the gen.: let your friends and mine be of good cheer, bono animo sint uti tui et mei familiares, Cic.: I confess that I have been too fearful, spiridless, nimium me timidum, nullius animi fulsus confiteor, Cic. (iii) "To be a duty, characteristic," &c. is often expressed by sum with a gen.: rashness is characteristic of youth, prudētia of age, temeritas est florentis aetatis, prudentia senescentis, Cic.: it is the duty of a young man to respect his elders, est adolescentis majores natu reveri, Cic.: Ptolemy was subject to the will of others, Ptolemaeus alieni arbitri erat, Liv. (iv) The object or result (in Eng. simply a predicate) is sometimes expressed by a dat. dependent on sum (v. L. G. § 296): you think that this country life ought to be a reproach and subject of accusation, vitam hanc rusticam in probro et crimini putas esse oportere, Cic.

2. existo, stiti, stitum, 3: this is (= arises; q. v.) chiefly the case in the greatest intellects, id in maximis ingeniis existit maxime, Cic.: I fear that I am too severe towards him, timeo ne in eum existam crudelior, Cic.: v. attend to my orders, sed satis verborum est; cura quae iust, Pl.: but in fact, sed enim, enīvero, v. 18 FACT. 2. verum (similar in force to ad: also at the beginning of its clause): (1.) of opposition, esp. in thought: we are inquiring, not what is useful to us, but what is necessary for the orator, non nos quid nobis utile, verum quid oratori necessarium sit quaerimus, Cic.: not only in acting but even in thinking, non modo agendo, verum etiam cogitando, Cic.: he adopts a foolish, but yet a merciful plan, consilium caput stultum, verum tamen clementia, Cic. (11.) esp. in transitions: the calendar of January were waited for, perhaps not rightly—but let us say nothing about the past, expectabantur calendae Januariae, forsitan non recte—verum praeterita omittamus, Cic. Esp. with the emphatic enīvero, but indeed! in very truth! cf. Sall. C. 20 (med.). 3. autem (denoting less of opposition than the two preceding words, being often = and then, moreover: as it is less emphatic, it follows the first word of the sentence which it introduces): (1.) to introduce a gentle contrast; esp. where a word is repeated: I myself write nothing, but I read (or, I read however) with the greatest pleasure, ipse nihil scribo; lego autem libentissime, Cic.: Croesus thought that he should overturn the power of his enemies, but he overturned his own, Croesus hostium vim sese perversum putavit, perversit autem suam, Cic. (11.) with interjections: but lo! a sudden divorce, ecce autem subitum divortium, Cic.: v. NOWEVER, MOREOVER. 4. vērō (implying, not so much opposition, as corroboration: like autem it follows the first word of its clause): the Helvetii had led three parts of their forces across the river, but the fourth was left on the hither side of it, Helvetii tres copiarum partes flumen transduxerant; quarta vero pars citra flumen reliqua erat, Caes.: Cic. 5. at (as archaic: always placed at the beginning of its clause): (1.) to denote transition of thought, and to introduce an addition, which usu. modifies what precedes: the contest was carried on vigorously, hand to hand with swords, but the Germans sustained the onset, comitatus gladiis acriter pugnatum est, at Germani impetus gladiorum exceperunt, Caes. (11.) in passionate exclamations, where it often introduces something quite abruptly: but how like they are! but how beautiful both! at quam sunt similes! at quam formosus uterque! Ov. F. 2, 395; cf. Hor. Epod. 3, 1: but by the immortal gods! what can be said about this? at per deos immortalis! quid est quod de hoc dici possit? Cic. (111.) to introduce the answer to an objection which is anticipated: what further is to be inquired? whether it was done? but it is admitted: by whom? but it is evident, quid porro quaerendum est? factumne sit? at constat: a quo? at patet, Cic.: but (you urge), the memory fails (in old age): so I believe, unless you keep it exercised, at memoria minuitur: credo, nisi enim exercereas, Cic. 6. aīquī: usu. = and yet, q. v. (1.) to connect an emphatic adversative clause: Cl—she makes you fine enough promises: Sy—but do you suppose that she is jesting? Cl—satis scite promittit ubi; Sy—atqui tu hanc locari credis? Ter. (11.) in conditional clauses: let him come: but if he lay a finger on her, his eyes shall be torn out instantly, sine veniat; atqui si illam digito attingerit, oculi illi illico effodientur, Ter.: Cic. (111.) after an expressed or virtual negative: Ni—, you shall never carry off the gold: Ch—no, but you will give it to me now; Ni—nunquam auferes hunc aurum; Ch—atqui iam dabis, Pl.: you state a wonderful thing; scarcely credible. But it is the fact, magnam narras, vix credibile. Atqui sic habet, Hor.: Cic. (iv.) to connect a minor premise: Cic.: v. NOW. [V. EQUIvalent to the relative pronoun and a negatively: quin (only after negative or virtually negative sentences: v. Gell. 11, 13): there is hardly a day but he comes to my house, dies fere nullus est quin domum meam veniat, Cic.: there was no one but said that he had heard this, nemo erat quin hoc se audire diceret, Cic.: I cannot but send letters to you, facere non possum quin ad te litteras mittam, Cic.: there was no doubt but that they were the most powerful, non erat dubium quin plurimum posset, Caes.: not but that an answer might have been briefly given, non quin breviter reddi responsum poterit, Liv. Phr.: (1.) but if, quod si; also when an alternative with si has gone before, si: but if not, quod nisi or quod ni: v. 11. (11.) but for, but that: (a) nial or ni, foll. by subj.: as, me the trunk would have cut off, but that Faunus lightened the blow, me truncus sustulerat, nisi Faunus ictum levasset, Hor. (b) absque (prep. with abl.: only in the colloq. language of the comedians): but for this one thing, how fortunate am I in everything else, quam fortunatus sum ceteris rebus, absque hac una foret, Ter.: Pl.: so, but for me, you, etc., absque me, to: Ter.: Pl. (c) also sometimes expr. by the help of quominus: as, but for Trebonius, it seemed they would have taken the place, statim per Trebonium, quominus oppido potuerunt, videbatur, Caes. (111.) not but that, non quin: not but that I could pay my debts . . . but because . . . non quin esse alienum solvere possem . . . sed quod, cf. Sall. Cic. (the same sense may be conveyed by non quod [quia] non . . . with subj., followed as before by sed quod or quia: v. THAT, BECAUSE).

Apud (with acc.): to stay by a town, apud oppidum morari, Caes.: to pass a night by the water, apud aquam noctem agitare, Sall.: Sulpicius was sitting by Crassus, Sulpicius apud Crassum sedebat, Cic. 3. secundum (along with acc.): he had his camp by the sea, castra a mare habebat, Caes.: centaurion grows by springs, centaurion a fontibus nascitur, Plin.: v. NEAR, AT. (11.) past, along, q. v. (chiefly in combination with verbs; as, to sail or ride by, flow by, etc.: usu. expr. by means of a prep. in compoetion; as, praetervebor, praeterficio, etc.). (iii.) on: usu, expr. by the abl.: he prepares for war by land and sea, bellum terra et mari (terra marique) comparat. Cic.: that journey is usually performed by land, illud iter pedibus fere conchit solet, Cic.: whether we pursue the Parthians by land or the Britons by sea, seu pedibus Parthos sequimur seu classe Britannos, Prop. (passive), Norw.—This construction is confined to the case of a personal agent. We also find, instead of the prep. and abl., the dative, esp. after the gerundive participle; as, *wisdom should be enjoyed by us, sapientia nobis (not a noble) fructus est, Cic. After the gerund, indeed, the prep. is only used to avoid occasional ambiguity: thus, we should say for these men must be resisted by you, a te (not tibi) his hominibus resistendum est. The dative after other forms of the passive, and the ablative without a preposition, belong to the poets: as, nor is she seen by any, neque cernitur ulli, Virg.: thou shalt be celebrated by Varius, a swan of Homeric time, scriberis Varius, Maeconi carminibus alite, Hor. Phr.: by your leave, bona tua venia dixerim, Cic.: v. LEAVE: by themselves they were unable to prevail upon the Sequani, Sequanis sua sponte persuadere non poterant, Caes. (iii.) of the cause, means, or mode: 1. ex or ex (with abl.: rare, and only of that out of which something arises): she is pregnant by Pamphilus, gravida e Pamphilo est, Ter.: led into hope of victory by the advantage of the position, In spem victoriae adductus ex opportunitate loci, (vi.) in adjunctions: 1. per (with acc.): *by gods and men, per deos atque homines, Cic.: I beseech you by your friendship and love, te per amicitiam et per amorem obsecro, Ter.: sometimes per stands at the beginning of the adjuration without an acc., the object appealed to being defined by the clause following: cf. Virg. A. 2, 142: Ove. 2. pro or proh (prop. an interj.): v. AR! also sometimes followed by the acc.: *by the faith of gods and men! p. deum atque hominum fidem! Cic.: by Jupiter! pro Jupiter! Ter. (but in a formal oath it would be per). Phr.: by Hercules! mehercules! mehercule! mehercle! hercules! hercule! berclie!
